

Major Incident Plan

Last Reviewed: September 2021
Next Review Due: September 2022
Reviewed By: Zoe Wiles

Major Incident Plan

It is highly unlikely that The London Acorn School will become the target of a direct attack. Our primary consideration in this matter is therefore the possibility of an attack in Central London. In such circumstances, parents will need answers to the following questions, amongst others:

1. Is my child safe and in school?
2. Will the school remain open/will the school be open tomorrow?
3. What is the procedure if I wish to collect my child from school?

Our communication methods with parents will be as follows:

1. Our primary means of communication will be via email.
2. Our website is hosted off-site by a low-profile provider which is no more likely to be the subject of an attack than the school itself.
3. We will also attempt to send out text messages via our school system. Please be aware, however, that mobile networks have previously been less reliable during terrorist attacks due to prioritisation for the emergency services or enforced closures.
4. If the website cannot be accessed, for example due to widespread power outages, physical notices will be placed on the gates at all the entrances to the school.
5. In the case of a significant event we consider it is possible, as was the case in Paris and Brussels in 2015, that there may be government or regional announcements regarding school closures. You may assume that the school will always follow any such formal announcements and act upon them with the safety of the young people in our charge as the paramount concern.

We will also follow the above communication procedures in the case of school closure due to other circumstances, such as extreme weather.

The procedure explained here can also be found on our website.

The London Acorn School has lockdown procedures to be initiated at need in the event of a terrorist or other incident. Schools are in routine contact with the Police, the Department for Education and the Local Authority who support us with information and advice.

In the event of a terrorist incident which forces school closure, no pupil will be permitted to leave the school site unless they are accompanied by a parent or previously authorised adult. I would encourage all families to discuss how they will collect their children from our school in an emergency and to ensure that the relevant school reception is notified in advance if you wish to authorise another adult to collect your child on your behalf. Please note that this policy differs from that for other closures, for example due to extreme weather, when Class 5 pupils may have secured permission to leave the school unaccompanied.

If pupils are away from the school's sites on a trip or for sport, the teacher in charge of the trip will decide whether to return to school immediately or to remain where they are. The lead teacher will take all reasonable steps to notify the school of their movements. The school will then communicate this to parents via the steps outlined above. Parents should still come to the school to collect their children and should not attempt to travel to the trip's location.

We hope that none of the above will be necessary. You may assume, however, that the safety of pupils will always be our paramount priority and that we will work with senior colleagues to ensure that the impact on the school of any attack in London is kept to an absolute minimum. Meanwhile, in common with other schools and institutions in the UK, our approach will be very much "business as normal.". We shall of course keep parents informed if the facts change sufficiently to justify a change of strategy on our part.